

Civil courts of Bangladesh

The civil court structure in Bangladesh is hierarchical, with the Supreme Court at the apex and district courts at the base. The Supreme Court consists of the Appellate Division and the High Court Division. The High Court Division hears appeals from subordinate courts and also has original jurisdiction over certain cases. District courts, present in each district, are the primary trial courts for civil cases. Below the district courts are various civil courts, including the Joint District Judge Court, Senior Assistant Judge Court, and Assistant Judge Court.

Here's a more detailed breakdown:

1. Supreme Court of Bangladesh:

- Appellate Division: Handles appeals from the High Court Division.
- High Court Division: Heals appeals from subordinate courts, writ petitions, and constitutional issues. It also has original jurisdiction over certain cases, including those involving commerce, real estate, and administrative matters.

2. Subordinate Civil Courts (District Courts and below):

- District Judge Court: The principal civil court in a district, handling a wide range of civil disputes.
- Additional District Judge Court: May be appointed to assist the District Judge in handling cases.
- Joint District Judge Court: Handles a variety of civil cases.
- Senior Assistant Judge Court: Also handles civil cases.
- Assistant Judge Court: Hears cases of a specific value limit.

3. Pecuniary Jurisdiction:

- Assistant Judge Courts generally have jurisdiction over cases valued up to a certain amount.
- District Judge Courts have jurisdiction over cases of a higher value.

4. Appeals:

- Appeals from decisions of the Senior Assistant Judge or Assistant Judge courts generally go to the District Judge.
